Fiona O'Byrne is an oil painter who explores the intersection of classical observation and expressive, painterly intuition. Spare compositions are arranged to capture the quiet gravity of the subject, colour is utilised to anchor the atmosphere, and a deliberate, tactile application of paint builds a surface that is both structurally solid and vibrantly fresh.

About the Artist

Fiona O'Byrne is a Melbourne-based painter who finds extraordinary beauty in the quiet corners of domestic life. Her work - a collection of delicate still life and intimate portraits - serves as a visual "slow down," inviting the viewer to step away from the noise of the digital world and find rest in the ordinary.

Originally trained as a Landscape Architect, Fiona's transition to oil painting in her mid-thirties brought a new perspective to her lifelong connection with nature. Whether she is painting a sprig of wattle gathered on a morning walk or a family member in a moment of repose, she seeks to capture the "quiet interiority" of her subjects through classical techniques and a rich, tactile surface.

"I want to evoke a world of simplicity and harmony," Fiona says. "For me, it isn't about the variety of the subjects, but the intensity with which they are experienced. I want to help people appreciate the beauty in the everyday."
