Brooke Marchel is an artist based in Sydney that specialises in oil painting. Her practice focuses on how ideas derived from Romanticism can be used in conjunction with the motif of drapery to amplify the contemporary storytelling and cinematic potential of painting. In her practice she creates intimate, small--scale paintings that invoke a lingering human presence without reliance on manifesting the figure. She does this by depicting domestic scenes that include signifiers such as uninhabited drapery and warm lighting.

Drawing inspiration from artists such as Bill Henson and Andrew Cranston, Brooke uses darkness and chiaroscuro lighting to depict contemporary narratives with a nostalgic mood. Her goal is for her viewers to feel a personal connection with her work, as her paintings focus on the shared intimacies of human experiences and represent human subjects and lifestyles.
