Fiona O'Byrne is an Australian artist who paints delicate still lives and portraits, using her immediate domestic environment to create works of quiet simplicity and classical harmony.

Her subject matter focuses on interiors and familial life – vases with freshly picked flowers from her neighbourhood, portraits of family and friends. There is a quiet intimacy in this domestic realism; she distils the essence of commonplace objects and highlights their beauty and poignancy. Her paintings could be seen as meditations on daily life; a humble celebration of the ordinary.

Based in Melbourne, the artist grew up in regional Victoria, moving to the city to study Landscape Architecture. Working as a Landscape Architect, as well as raising two children, she didn't arrive to painting until her mid-thirties.

Recently, after spending many years balancing her painting with work commitments, Fiona has taken the leap into practicing as a full-time artist. She comments "I like the act of painting. But even more, I like the act of looking. I like looking at flowers, and carefully handmade vessels. I like spending time noticing all the details, like the translucency of a petal, the curve of stem. These days I try and spend my days noticing these things with patience, consideration and attention, in the hope that people might connect with or respond to the way I see the world".
